whatever and no matter how widely spread the praise of the natural beauties of the Catakill Mountain House, no less might be said, and with equal truth, of the hotel as a heaith resort. Its peculiar situation, its foundation literally upon a rock, the neighboring pine woods, the clear dry air of the altitude—these combine in their beneficial effects upon all who are afflicted with maiaria or hay fever, or with general debility. It may also be neved that, in the eighty-two years in which this famous hosteiry has been open to the public, it has never known a case of typhoid fever—a record which it would be hard to match and which is the more noteworthy when the vast numbers of its patrons are recalled, coming from all parts of the world, and in that great lapse of time encountering many periods of widespread disease. The water used is from a spring whose absolute purity is guarded from all possibility of contamination. Here is invigoration in the fresh, cool air, a tonic to tired body and har assed nerves alike.
